

DEPARTMENT OF DEMOGRAPHY

Brown

Bag

Tod Hamilton

Immigration and the Remaking of Black America

Wednesday, January 29
12-1PM
2232 Piedmont Avenue

*Coffee, tea and cookies will be served.
Questions: 642-9800*

Tod Hamilton is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology and a Faculty Associate of the Office of Population Research at Princeton University. His research interests are in the field of demography, with an emphasis on immigration and health. His current research evaluates the relative importance of culture and selective migration in explaining differential patterns of stratification between U.S.-born and foreign-born individuals in the United States. Hamilton also explores the degree of health selection among contemporary immigrants to the United States as well as the role that social, economic, and health conditions in immigrants' countries of origin play in explaining variation in their post-migration health in the United States.

Berkeley