Tenure Track position in Social Sciences with a multi-disciplinary collaborative interest in immigration

The School of Social Sciences at the University of California, Irvine seeks applications for an Assistant Professor position that can be located in Sociology, Economics, or Political Science. The successful candidate will be expected to demonstrate strong research skills and a commitment to an active program of research and publication focusing on important social science questions dealing with some aspect of immigration, broadly defined. It is also expected that the candidate will be interested in research involving multi-disciplinary collaborative work with other immigration faculty in Sociology and other social science departments. In the case of candidates in sociology, areas of specialization are open, but it is expected that the applicant's major research interest will include immigration in some significant sense.

All application materials must be uploaded electronically and include: a cover letter describing research and teaching, a curriculum vita, three research papers relevant to social sciences and dealing with some aspect of immigration, and three letters of reference. Please refer to the following website for instructions on how to apply: http://www.socsci.uci.edu/recruit_instructions.php.

The screening of candidates will begin October 31, 2008 but candidates may apply until the position is filled. The University of California, Irvine is an Equal Opportunity Employer committed to excellence through diversity.
