

Assistant Professor in Health Economics UCLA School of Public Affairs

The Department of Public Policy of the UCLA School of Public Affairs seeks to recruit an economist for a tenure-track, assistant professor position. We seek candidates in particular with interests in health economics (domestic and/or international). We welcome applicants with expected doctorates as well as those who have received their doctorates within the past few years.

The position involves research, teaching, and service contributions to the Department. The Department offers a two-year Master of Public Policy (MPP) degree program and participates actively in an undergraduate minor in public affairs. You may wish to visit our web site at www.publicaffairs.ucla.edu Public Policy to learn more about the Public Policy Department.

The application package should reference search # 1182-1011-1E and should include a C.V., research paper, three references and a cover letter addressed to: Chair, Economist Recruitment Committee, Department of Public Policy, UCLA School of Public Affairs. Electronic submission to: ppfacsrch@publicaffairs.ucla.edu or by mail to: 3250 Public Affairs Building, Los Angeles, CA 90095-1656

We will begin reviewing applications on November 15th, but will continue receiving applications until the position is filled. The School of Public Affairs at UCLA is committed to building a more diverse faculty, staff and student body as it responds to the changing population and education needs of California and the nation. The University of California is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer.